ON THE MOVE

The past 18 months has taught us that homeworking and teleworking have many advantages and have been embraced by many employers, both locally and internationally, for their workforce.

However, employers and organizations need to be aware that in cases where there is an international aspect to working from home, there is a lot to consider beyond simply providing the right ergonomic chair and an adapted home office. For example, what effect does home working on an international basis (occasional or not) have on the applicable social security law and even labour law?

This is a complex issue and Innangard, an international network of employment law specialists, invite you to our free lunch seminar on Thursday 7 October at 1p.m. CET. The interactive legal presentation will last approximately 60 minutes, after which attendees will have the opportunity to ask specific questions.

THURSDAY 7TH OCTOBER

12:00-13:00 BST / 13:00-14:00 CET /
16:00-17:00 PT

SPEAKER:

Mr. Bruno De Pauw, Advisor General at the Belgian Social Security Administration, Department of International Relations, and a visiting lecturer at the Sorbonne University in Paris, France.
